Spring 2018

WAR/TERRORISM

*SUBMISSION DEADLINE
NOVEMBER 15, 2017*

Union general William Sherman is quoted to have said "War is all hell." This is particularly true for children living in countries rife with the violence of war and terrorism. Their homes, their friends, their families and their physical and mental well-being are the collateral damage of adults' inability to solve differences without violence. How has children's literature portrayed the sobering topics of war and terrorism? For this issue, we seek manuscripts that explore ways in which children's literature can help children to understand today's world. For this issue of The Dragon Lodge, we want to explore children's literature that focuses on war or terrorism. We encourage submissions from all genres of literature and suitable for various ages.
